

SUMMARY OF STUDY

Illicit Discharge Elimination Project. 2006. PBS&J.

Characterized non-storm water sources of bacteria into two local streams, eliminated any of these sources which were illicit, and sought to determine whether subsequent bacteria levels in the streams decreased as a result. The findings were mixed, and suggest that other mechanisms besides direct input, contribute largely to instream bacteria levels.